

INTRODUCTION TO TEAM AND GROUP COACHING

For professionals curious about coaching teams and groups as they navigate their way to success.

Ready to learn about Team coaching?

Introduction to Team and Group Coaching is a practical programme of learning and participation offering a taste of both team and group coaching.

With 30 CCE PD hours.

"Understanding the difference between a team and a group helped me design and plan what I can offer as a coach." Coach alumni from Team Coaching.

"Our team coach helped us shift to a new level of honesty and communication as a team. We have built our level of humour, our ability to be playful with each other. Which means we have better ideas!" Team member, coached by an alumni coach.

Do you know of a team that wants to be an even better team? Whatever that looks like to you – a team coach can help you get there!

Many of us are in a team at work. Your work, and your results are interconnected with your team-mates. You make decisions together to deliver agreed results. Successful teams work together with a high level of trust. Successful teams are trusted by other teams and stakeholders.

Bringing a team together is not as simple as selecting a bunch of high performing individuals. Sometimes the most successful solo performers struggle to add value and might even impede collective outcomes, in a team environment.

A team coach supports teams (and groups) to map their strengths and their 'could be betters'; enabling them to scope their unique navigational tools and partnering them to plot their path across the often-wild seas of their environment to calmer waters.

Your team coach arrives into the team's ecosystem, ready to partner a team in their learning, their growth and their best outcomes. Team coaches can work with teams on: goals, strategies, agreed ways of operating; systems for communication and decision-making; equitable contribution, psychological safety and many other things.

And groups. Groups consist of individuals coming together to learn about similar things. A group of new leaders, learning about their individual strengths and work-ons or a group of supervisors, new to supervision, who are trained and now working together as a community of practice. Or a group of women in the workplace, traversing territories of change and resilience together. A group-coach will provide the space in which group members can develop their individual goals; design actions which move them forward; come together to reflect; plan next steps, and celebrate success.

Who's this programme for?

Coach/Facilitator

You may be an accomplished 1:1 coach? Or a skilled facilitator, already conversant with facilitating learning, or discovery processes with groups or teams of people. You may have some good ideas about the differences between teams and groups? About the varied sorts of interventions which can help a group or a team move towards more success?

HR Professionals

An HR expert who sees the global trends and is seeking to leverage team coaching knowledge, understandings and skills to help your organisation make that shift.

Leaders

You could be a leader, who wants to learn the 'coach-approach' to working with your team? A coaching champion who wishes to expand your offering to include groups and teams?

A Team member

Or maybe you are simply curious – what is different about working with groups and teams using coaching? What are some of the structures or processes that I could employ to help my team, or many teams, to discover their 'even better' and succeed?

The Content

This is a practical programme in which you will learn:

- What's different about a group and a team?
 - What are some useful processes and tools for working with a group or a team?
 - How does group coaching work?
 - How does team coaching work?
 - What are my strengths and my work-ons as a group or team coach?
- + a practical assignment with a team

What will you need to consider?

The programme delivers 30 hours of ICF approved CCEUs. If you'd like us to work with your organisation to deliver this learning and development to a group (between 9 and 18 people) of your participants, let's negotiate the delivery schedule and cadence that works for you? Our public programme is offered in a combination of virtual and face to face sessions to optimise the value.

Each participant will need to identify a team (3 -9 people who work together regularly, towards a common set of goals) who are willing to be your 'coachee-team'. Each participant will work with their chosen team through the steps of a team coaching process including: identifying/scoping their need for coaching, the agenda for coaching, the coaching contract + delivering at least three coaching sessions with them + you will also get some feedback.

We recommend that you plan to attend all live sessions to benefit from learning as a group. However, sessions will be recorded for participants.

ICF have approved 22 hours of Core Competencies and 8 hours of Resource Development for this programme.
